

GENTOO PENGUINS live on Sea Lion Island all year round. The Falkland Islands are one of the most important locations in the world for this species. Two large round eggs are laid from late September. The chicks will be ready to go to sea by the end of March.

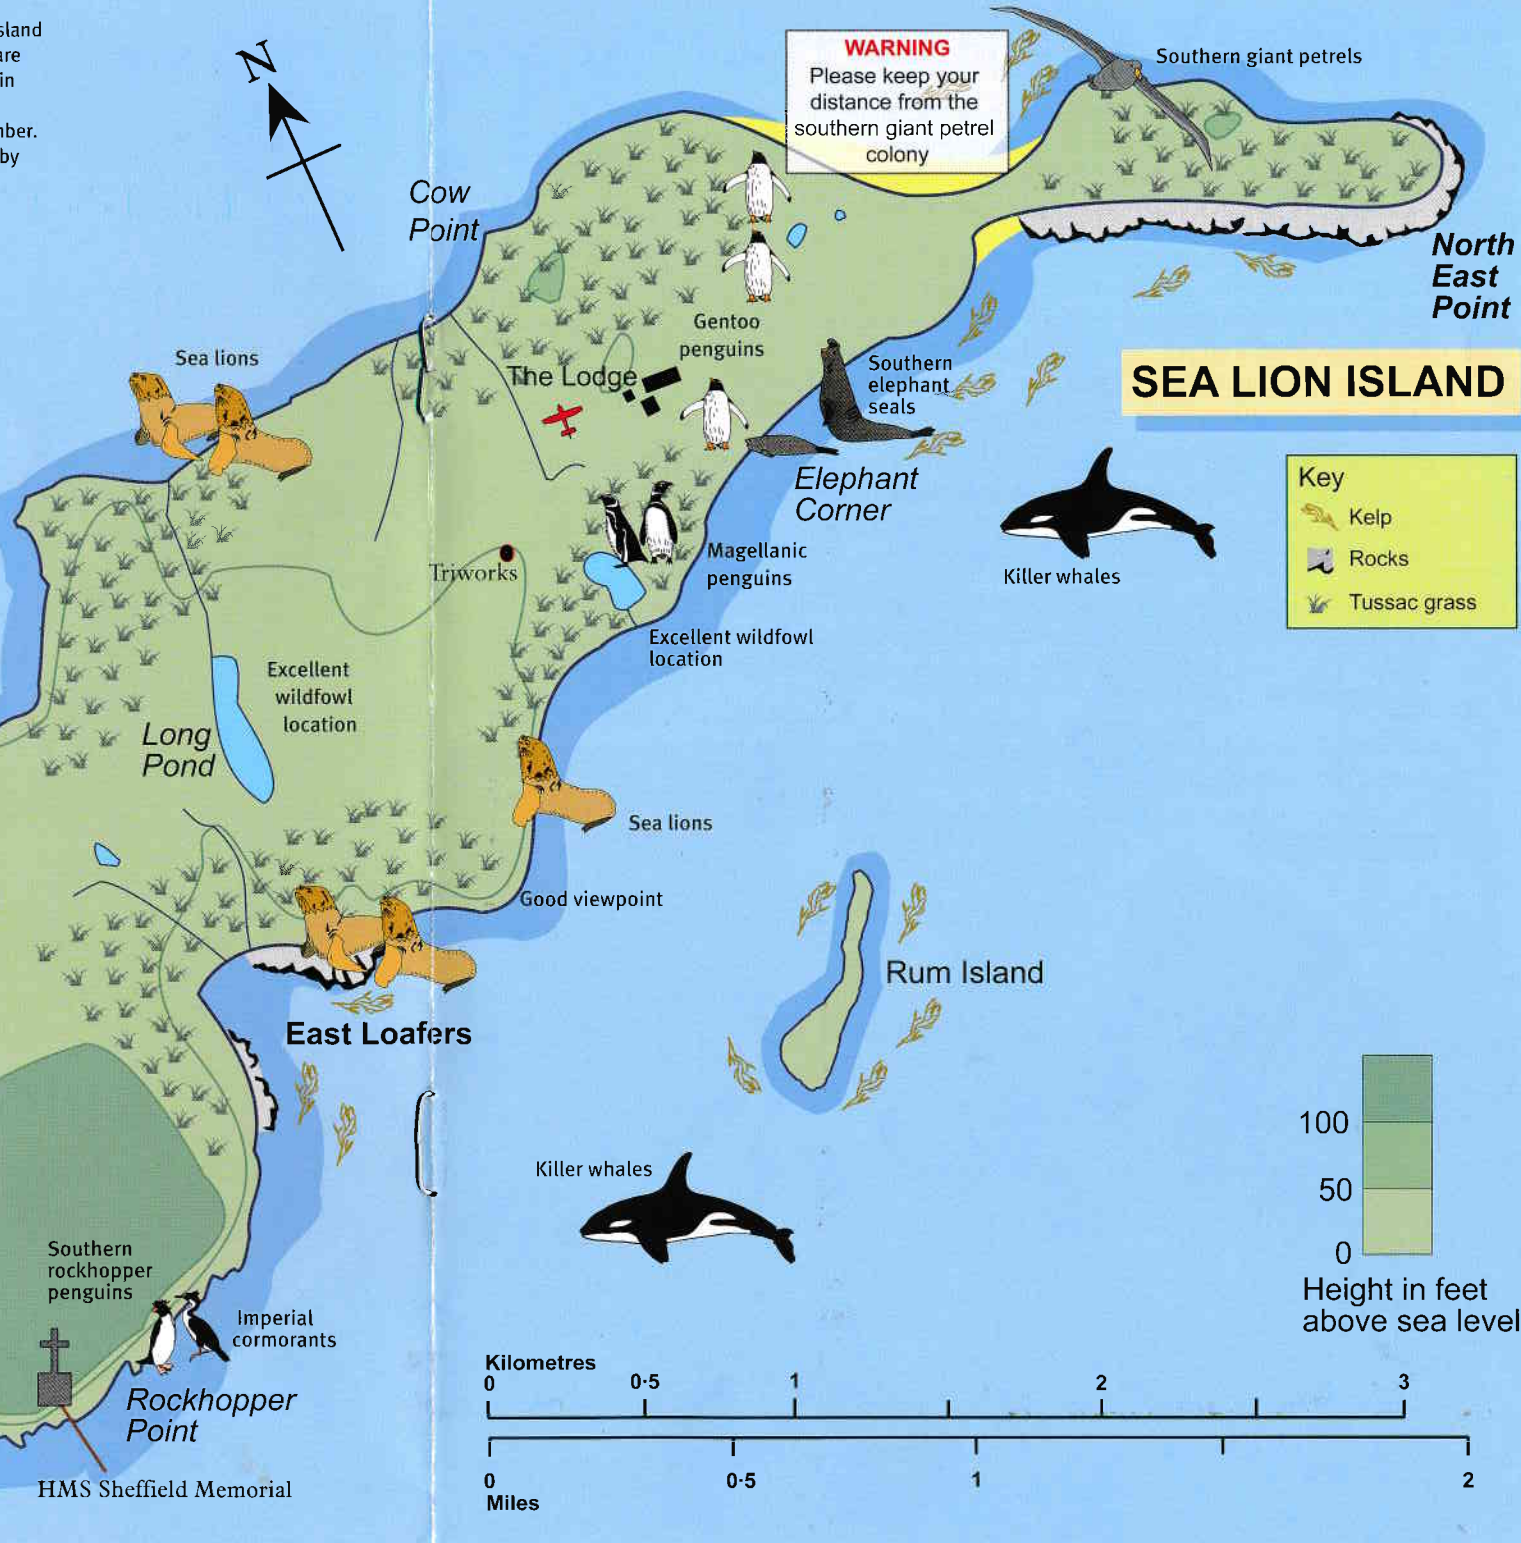

SOUTHERN ROCKHOPPER PENGUINS are the smallest of the Falkland penguins and come here to breed on cliff tops in October. They feed on fish and squid. Their numbers have declined globally over many years, but the Falkland Islands still hold important breeding populations.

MAGELLANIC PENGUINS are known in the Falklands as the jackass penguin because of their braying call. They arrive here in September, but have left by April to migrate north as far as Brazil. They breed in underground burrows.
